[PORTABLE] You can put everything fits into a big carry bag with backpack strap for easy transport. Inside mesh storage pockets are available for keeping your essential fishing gear or accessories handy & out of the bottom of the sled.

ONE-MINUTE SET UP

Ice fishing shelters, also known as ice fishing huts, ice shanties, or ice fishing houses, are portable structures that provide protection and comfort to anglers while they fish on frozen lakes and rivers. These shelters are essential for ice fishing because they offer refuge from cold temperatures, wind, and precipitation. There are several types of ice fishing shelters, each with its own advantages:

Flip-Over Shelters: These are compact, sled-based shelters that can be easily transported to your fishing spot. They usually consist of a sled that can be pulled by hand or a snowmobile. When you reach your location, you flip the shelter over, creating a tent-like structure. Flip-over shelters are quick to set up and take down.

Hub Style Shelters: Hub shelters have a central hub with collapsible frames and fabric walls. They are relatively easy to set up and provide more space than flip-over shelters. They come in various sizes to accommodate different numbers of anglers.

Pop-Up Shelters: Pop-up shelters are compact and easy to transport. They typically have a spring-loaded mechanism that allows them to pop open and take shape when unfolded. They are simple to set up but may not provide as much insulation as other types.

Permanent Shelters: These are more substantial structures that are typically left on the ice for the entire winter season. They are like small cabins, often equipped with heating systems, bunk beds, and other amenities. Permanent shelters provide the most comfort but are less portable.
